

PUBLIC CONTRACTS | FRANCE

Over these past few years, the practice of public contracts in France has undergone profound change. The characteristic complexity of concessions and public-private partnerships now also applies to public contracts, public land lease agreements, and urban development operations. Slow growth and pressure on public finances lead to harsher competition between economic operators. Disputes concerning public contracts are therefore on the rise, particularly during the execution stage.

Gide set up a team dedicated to public contracts 25 years ago. It numbers 20 lawyers and includes several former judges who work with companies and public bodies alike.

Our clients appreciate our in-depth knowledge of public sector and administrative court operation, our creativity and pragmatism in the field of contractual engineering – very far removed from the inflexibility sometimes associated with public law – as well as our availability and unflinching determination in the service of their projects.
